Basketball

Fast action and lively team play make basketball one of the most exciting of all games. The players on both teams are constantly in motion, making quick starts, sharp changes of direction, and sudden stops. Meanwhile they may pass the ball while at the rate of about one pass every second. Throwing and catching the ball requires closest kind of teamwork. The defensive players work also as a team if they are to prevent their opponents from scoring.

In basketball a score can be made at any instant. A player scores when he throws the ball in the basket. During a game teams score frequently and the total points for both sides is often more than 100.

Basketball was invented in 1891 by Dr. James A. Naismith, a physical director at the training school of the Young Men's Christian Association in Springfield, Mass. Basketball met a demand for a game that could be played indoors in the winter, between the football and baseball season. With surprising speed, basketball spread to schools, colleges, and athletic clubs all over the United States. The game also proved extremely popular abroad. It was added to the Olympic Games for the first time in 1936, and that year 22 nations entered teams.

Basketball draws as many as 75 million paid admissions a year more than any other sport. The large-attendance result from the great number of teams playing the game. In every state boys and girls play basketball in high school, colleges, and athletic clubs. Many teams represent towns, churches, and business houses. In addition to the amateur teams there are many professional clubs through out the United States. The largest professional league, the National Basketball Association, was formed in 1949. Professional basketball employs many ex-college stars but it has not attained the popularity of professional baseball or football.

Some Features of Women's Basketball

Many girls' teams play according to boy's rules. But the official basketball rules for women call for teams of six members three forwards and three guards. Only the forwards are to throw for the basket. Players do not range the entire court as in boys' basketball. Each player must stay in her own zone. The playing floor is divided into two zones at midcourt. The game consists of four quarters of not more than eight minutes each, with a ten-minutes rest between the second and third quarters.

College will fit a man for marriage, especially if he worked his way through by washing dishes.

"EVERYBODY MAKES MISTAKES"

It's funny how some people hate to admit that they are wrong. You would think that being wrong was a horrible disgrace. There is nothing shameful about it. Nobody can be right all the time. Everybody makes mistakes. That is why they put erasers on pencils. So when you are wrong, why not admit it? Actually it's the smart thing to do.

When you confess your mistakes quickly, they attract much less attention. If you deny them, argue and alibi, everyone knows that you have pulled a boner and are ashamed to admit it.

People respect someone who admits it when he happens to be wrong. He may have made a mistake but he is smart enough to recognize it and honest enough to say so.

He that makes no mistakes does nothing. He that makes too many mistakes loses his job. We should find ourselves between these two extremes.
